This house, built between about 1910 and 1920, faces northeast onto Maryland Route 765. It is a rectangular-plan, two-story, wood-framed house set on a concrete or stuccoed foundation and with a front-facing gable roof. The modern white and green siding may be replacing original wood shingles, also painted in contrasting colors. The original siding might also have been weatherboarding. The eaves have all recently been boxed in. The house is two rooms deep, and the facade is two bays wide. The side door is sheltered by a bracketed, hipped stoop roof. The other bay of the facade is defined by a three-part window. All windows are glazed with eight-over-one double-hung sash. There is a hipped-roof, screened-in porch on the southeast side of the house.
